12UP BELICHICK IS THE TRUE GOAT IN NEW ENGLAND

Patrick Chung saw his time on the field cut short during Super Bowl LIII after he sustained a broken arm on the opening drive of the second half. Chung's injury wasn't enough to spur a Rams' comeback and one of the team's executives had some harsh words for Chung after the game.

Leaked screenshots of text messages from Rams' executive Matt Hogan were revealed and he took some shots at Chung, calling the safety a "bh" after the 32-year-old went down with his injury. Chung called out Hogan for Chung is believed to be on the receiving end of these text messages (though not confirmed), which almost makes it seem like Hogan texted the wrong person when trying to rip the Patriots' safety.

Hogan was soon trying to walk back his words, saying that he was "just messing around" with Chung and that it was "all in just fun."

If these messages are real, then this is an extremely classless look for the Rams' executive. Insulting a player after they suffered a major injury in one of the biggest games of their career is extremely disrespectful.

If his final text message is anything to go by, Hogan is far from forgiven in Chung's mind.
